

MIME MADE ANOTHER YEAR

I always joked around by saying that I will die at 27, like all the famous rockstars. Turns out, I was wrong! Ah! I never liked Birthdays, and probably I never will. They always felt so stupid and meaningless. Yet, I always suffered by the weight they are meant to have in our society, making me feeling stupidly attached to whatever happens during that ~0.273% of total life time I have been unwillingly donated with. So, what can I say about this 28 years old mime that was not there for his 27th version? His twenty-eighth year served him as a grounding learning Back with my pottery classes. There is just something so pleasant in being surrounded by people handcrafting such beautiful pieces.

THOUGHTS ON COMPETENCE

This month taught me how much competence is impactful in my own being. As I, once again, failed to achieve a personal work achievements (with a quite bland and callous feedback in between), I really lost confidence and faith in my own abilities. In fact, I was navigating towards accepting a job in a field that felt like I was really not good at. This sensation somehow crashed my identity, and dragged me down to some quite dark days. This lasted for around a week, until the

WHAT IS THIS?

In what it seems like a flagellant joke, I decided to start a self-made newspaper-styled montly report of my life. Because my perilous writing skills are only second to my ability to artistically design stuff; so experience. The Loud Mime now knows a bit about the meaning of being lost, and is still persuing his newly started quest to fully acquire its meaning. Loud Mime also found back a new, much needed, spiritual view of life. Reality lost its monopolious importance, in favor of all that is nebulous and fuzzy. Beauty gained a guiding role in the mime sight, always looking for it in all that sorrounds him. This biological year taught him well, that beauty is there only for those who are willing to see it. Symbolism gained a new importance; life taught the loud mime that symbols are not irrelevant just because they are not causally real, but instead they are important as they hold the key for human solace. Last, Loud Mime was once again

Punk duck. Caption title says it all.

"Humanity, which always dreamt of imprisoning Crónos, horrendously found out they that were actually only imprisoning themselves."
from
Tempo -- Guido Tonelli
(poorly traslated from Italian by me)

universe decided to once again show the fruits of my work, as several people reached to me stating the contribution I had in helping them pursuing their endeavors. This somehow 'fixed' me, making me see once again the quality of my work. As my friend Mahima a few weeks later made me realize, the problem most likely occured because I projected my whole identity in the specific realm of my professional work, rather than keeping it broad in all that I am and do. As a consequence, when my professional work was having a descending moment, I went down with it. Besides this (very meaningful!) realization, I do want to this might be the best chance I have to remind myself of how much I suck at things. And because self-deprecating attitudes are quite common nowadays, I will also allow some of my close friends to remind me of my gruesome skills by sharing these pages with them.

blessed with his true sensibility to emotions. Tears are once again flowing through his soul, and with them he is slowly gaining its connection with all that is humanity. Cages can always bend. It's funny to think that, despite all of those changes, the Loud Mime feels so deeply and utterly unstable in his feelings and conditions. "Transitions are both inevitable and startling -- like a scenic drive before a hair pin bend, an abrupt storm, a rediscovered love." -- Upstate. All in all, Loud Mime is growing -- in all senses. And for that, I am so grateful for all the people that enabled that. A special mention goes to Louana, which might never know about me, but of which only existence gifted me so, so many emotions.

A Lovespoon I got gifted. Talking about the beauty of handcrafted items. So grateful and connected with this symbol.

reflect on the this episode a bit further. The reason I eventually got over that dark sadness and lack of confidence was through these people, reaching out to tell me about my contributions. But, my contributions would have been there regardless of me knowing of them. The thoughts I then had is that, perhaps, we should not always and neccesarly rely on direct feedbacks, but also have faith that the fruits we produce are feeding someone or something around us, regardless of us directly observing that. Because, after all, we are all meant to do what best enable our identity, and in that there is no performance metric to be checked.

SEASON OF CHANGES

Nothing calls mutations more than spring. If you, like me, have the habit of observing things over and over through the days, you will then also appreciate the variation of things during the raise of spring. The whole environment hastily evolves into a more dynamic and colorful space. Sprouts appear all over branches, opening up by the days and powerfully take over the vegetarian background. Flowers pop all Latte Art (???) Yeah do not ask me how I got to this.

"All roads lead to roads"
from
they -- helle helle

Cloudy Sunset. You don't get these colors this often in Flanders, but when you do, you better take your time with them.

Dan's Mom: "It will do you good, get lost for a little while"
Dan: "I think I should stick around"
Dan's Mom: "No, get lost Danny. It's not a request."

from
Dan in Real Life

over the place, covering all that is not green yet with various colors. Insects invade the air and the soil, creating a passive dynamics all over your sight. Animals too change behavior, waking up from the cold season. And humans do not make exception, as now parks are swarmed with joyful people enjoying every ray of sun. Nothing calls change more than spring. And this year, I really felt its call. Change besieged my mind and kept unsettling me, as my actions felt back towards a more known and stable future. As all of my cells demanded change, it has not been easy to accept my rejection to it

Someone read my tarots. Short summary: they said I am struggling with a decision, but I should probably focus more on what I have now rather than what I could get. Ah! Jokes on me!

Ghent at night. Everything becomes more meaningful, when sent back through a pure and unfiltered reflection.

Aaaand another sunset. I really missed the good season, okay??

by deciding to stick around in the same city and for the same job position. In my mind, change has to come from a variations in circunstances. Probably a fallacious argument, that is alas still strong in my mentality. As I prepare myself to hold my steps within known territory, I am trying to educate myself to the following conclusion, coming from the movie 'Dan In Real Life':

"Instead of telling our young people to plan ahead, we should tell them to plan to be surprised."

Heron on a roof. When sad or bored, just look up high.

MY MUSICAL MONTH WRAPPED

- Galaxy Song -- Monty Python
- 50 Ways to Leave Your Lover -- Paul Simon
- Always Look On The Bright Side Of Life -- Monty Python
- Soothe Me -- Sam & Dave
- Memphis Soul Stew -- King Curtis
- What'd I Say, Pt.1 & 2 -- Ray Charles
- Amsterdam -- Coldplay
- M -- Florist
- Vim and Vigor -- Carsie Blanton
- Hospital (ft. Remi Wolf) -- Madison Cunningham, Remi Wolf

DISCLAIMER :)

This text has been entirely written by humans. Any generative AI has been intenionally avoided. The natural consequence of this choice is the raising of imperfections all over the document. Imperfections are among the most human things I know; and they surely are a pure indication of my deepest and core being. In a world where technology is taking over all of our human functions, it is our own responsibility to step back and enjoy the slow, dull process of creating things by ourselves.